High school is a very significant period in our lives as teenagers. As we progress from Grade 9 to Grade 13 we undergo a series of changes until we have shed the chrysalis of insecurity, doubt and self-consciousness to emerge as confident, mature individuals who know what direction to follow after graduation. To achieve such a successful metamorphosis of character, the high school student must participate in the various organizations and activities of his school, and, through experience and association, gather the benefits and challenges that high school presents. The all-round student is one who stresses the academic side of education but, at the same time, emphasizes the importance of the athletic and social aspects. The most thorough way to engage in the many different activities of high school is to participate in the one organization that encompasses all of these — namely, the yearbook.

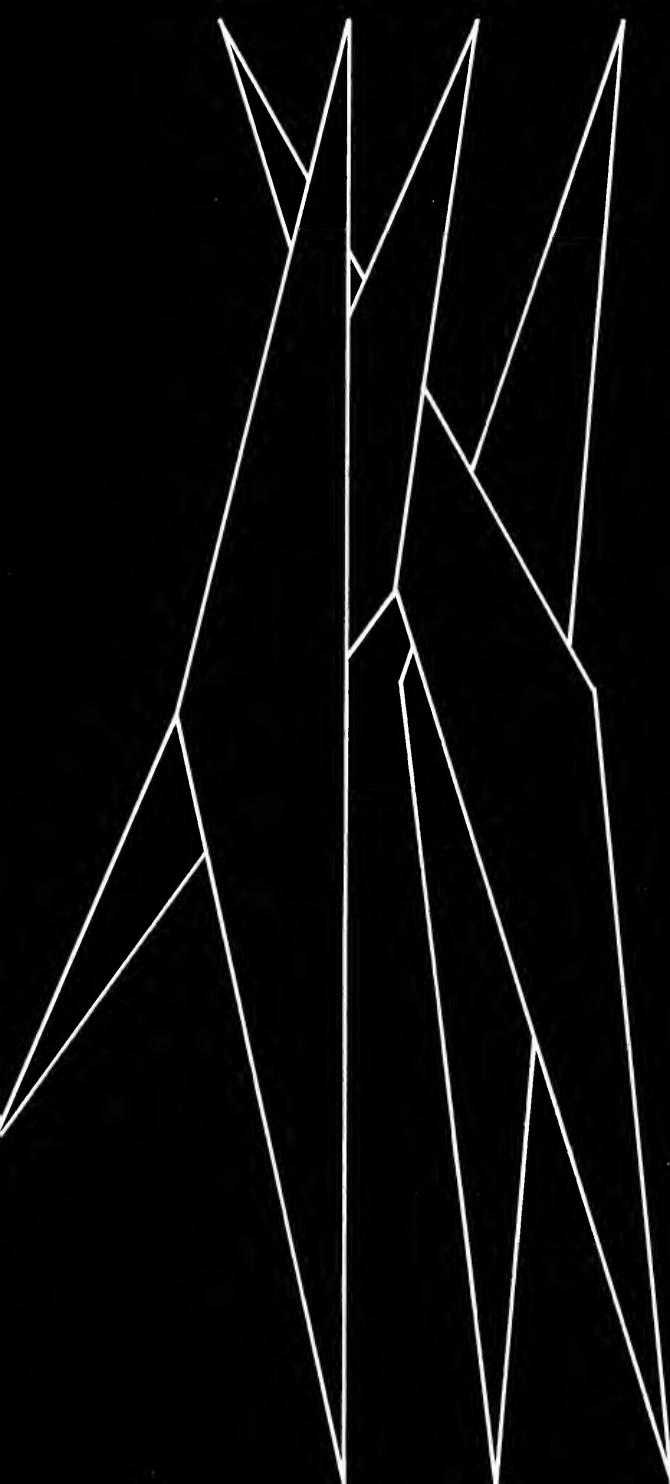

The chief aim of the staff of Actiana is to make the yearbook a complete and accurate account of all the events that occur during the school year of 1968. Actiana is published by the students for the students of Wallaceburg District Secondary School. Your encouragement and enthusiasm are essential to assure the staff that Actiana is strongly supported by the students. There would be no point in publishing a yearbook for a few students and this is precisely why your constructive criticism and participation are welcomed. I would like to take this opportunity to appeal to all boys who are interested in photography. Pictures make a yearbook and an editor cannot accomplish much if she has nothing to edit. The yearbook is not for girls only, and I encourage all interested boys, as well as other students, to seriously think of contributing to the production of Actiana.

Being editor of Actiana has been the biggest and most responsible position that I have ever held, and yet I would have completely failed had I not the unselfish assistance of my entire staff. To everyone, who in any way, contributed to the publication of Actiana, I extend my deepest and most sincere thanks and I hope that many who worked on Actiana this year will wish to edit a particular section of Actiana '69.

Being editor has been a full-time job, but I know that all the worry, excitement and pressure of deadlines will be worth it when I see the results of all our efforts. On behalf of myself and my staff, I take great pride in presenting to you ACTIANA '68.

An abstract graphic design consisting of several white lines of varying lengths and orientations. These lines intersect to form a series of sharp, angular shapes, some of which resemble elongated triangles or shards. The lines are set against a solid black background, creating a high-contrast, minimalist aesthetic. The overall composition is dynamic and geometric.

THE PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

We Canadians have been aroused with a new sensation of National unity and pride. It is the result of an exciting and most successful Centennial experience! The World has shown a new respect for us. Hold high your heads. Young Canadians are living in a dynamic, progressive, exciting and often times a disturbing era. However, we must all adjust our goals along with the other free nations of the World, in the struggle for survival. It is imperative that young people develop consciences which care about other people throughout the whole, wide world. We must not only sympathize and show concern for other people, but we must prove our good intentions with worthwhile actions.

Make these years at High School not only a period for intellectual growth, but personality development and emotional maturity. Everything that is worthwhile comes with much striving. The challenges handed to you are many.

Do not be afraid of speaking out. The great prophets through the ages have been rebels against orthodoxy and they would be rebels today. They would not be rebels for the sake of creating disturbances but rebels with a cause. We have much to be proud of in our young life as a nation. We must listen to the lessons of past experiences, to help make our decisions more effective. Out breeding, out gunning and out producing other groups can no longer be counted on to provide security, prosperity or peace or even survival. We must all learn to live as human people that believe in equal human rights for all.

VALEDICTORY ADDRESS

Doug Steen

Valedictorian Douglas Steen told a representative gathering of parents, teachers and well-wishers, that the Wallaceburg District Secondary School 1967 graduating class, as part of the new generation, is prepared to see the trend of progress for the good of all humanity continue.

This assurance was given on behalf of all graduates at the school's commencement exercises on Friday, November 17.

Reflecting thoughts of graduates, the Valedictory address recalled the period of entry to the school, and the gradual changes in point of view and attitude.

After recalling many boyish and girlish actions, the address, in a more serious mood, noted that each graduate had now embarked on another phase in life, and found that no matter what part is chosen, it will be a grand adventure.

The graduates acknowledged that it is a wonderful thing to be young in a vibrant nation such as Canada, and noted that never before in the history of mankind, has a generation such a bright future.

On the other hand, they made it quite clear that they realized fully, the many pressing social and international problems of their time. This they regarded as being the price to be paid for progress.

It was pointed out in the address that friends are as essential as the air we breathe, and in this respect, the 1967 graduating class has been a splendid example.

The graduates are satisfied that if the class of 1967 is typical of this new generation, posterity will not be disappointed.

Pre-exercise excitement.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

November 17, 1967 was a memorable day for the graduates of Wallaceburg District Secondary School. This year's student council president, Tricia Mickle, capably conducted the commencement exercises.

The valedictory address presented by Doug Steen of the Class of '67 was thought-provoking. It concerned the "grand adventures" that await the new generation.

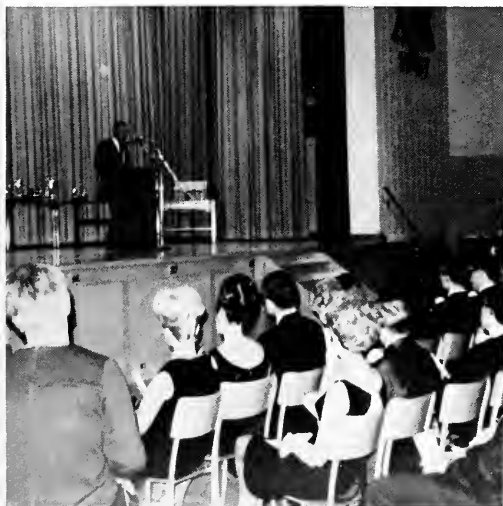

The highlight of the evening occurred when the guest speaker, Mr. B.C. Matthews, B.Sa., A.M., Ph.D., Vice-President University of Guelph, spoke to the graduates and encouraged them never to lose faith and hope in tomorrow.

This year's Ontario Scholarship Awards went to Marie Arnold and Chris Krokoszynski. An overall average of 80% is required in grade 13 to achieve this award.

The evening concluded with the annual commencement dance.

PROFILE OF DISTINCTION

The President's Report

As time passes on, places grow larger and progress. Last year, as a result of increased growth, our school progressed to a new six-day cycle system. The purpose for this change in system was to increase the efficiency of the school.

This year our student council underwent a change. This council is the first to follow the new constitution set up by last year's council. With this new constitution on closer check is kept on all finances and committees. In this way the council is run more efficiently.

Some examples of this increased efficiency are the profits made at each dance, the increased attendance at student council meetings and the well-kept account of our finances.

This year, our system of education also underwent a change. No longer is the stress put on the end-of-term exams but on the day by day, week by week progress of the students. The purpose of this new system is to give a clearer picture of the work of each student.

In order to keep a clear picture of the activities and achievements of each year, I suggest that all students purchase a yearbook. This year's staff, under editor Cindy Crist, is to be congratulated for its presentation of this school year in Actiana '68.

In closing I wholeheartedly thank my excellent executive, the various committee chairmen and the student council itself for the leadership and co-operation displayed this year. The running of a student council must be a team effort; I am proud to have been a part of this year's team.

In Kent "A" Junior Cross-Country (Intermediate) our teams placed first and sixth. Of the first ten individuals to finish, Wallaceburg was well represented with Chuck Altiman (first), Leonard Shognosh (second), Kale Shipman (fifth), Lionel Sands (eighth), and Louis Isaac (ninth).

The B.A.A.

The B.A.A. is an athletic organization made up of elected class representatives. This group is in charge of all house league activities. Money raised by this association, through dances and game passes, pays for the officials of inter-school activities. Any remaining funds are put into an athletic project which is under the supervision of the association.

The Athletic Letter

An intense interest in sports participation gives many boys the opportunity to wear the Athletic Letter. To achieve this award, a boy must compile 150 points, which are based on his own participation in inter-house and inter-school sports activities. This award is a justifiable honour for any boy, for it shows that he has a keen interest in athletics, which is a quality all people look for in a man.

The G.A.A.

The Girls' Athletic Association consists of representatives from each of the various grades. Meetings are held regularly and the association pursues various projects. This year an athletic night started off the season's activities. Sports of all kinds, a hootenanny and a dance highlighted the evening.

A Talent Show also provided entertainment and added to the success of this year's association. Thanks girls.

The Athletic Letter

The maroon letter "W" signifies hard work and great athletic achievements on the part of a student. Participation in inter-house sports, on school teams, in the Girls' Athletic Association and refereeing are ways in which girls earn points towards their letter.

This year's greatest endeavour of the G.A.A. was a talent show put on by students. It attracted a crowd of 1300 students and parents alike. The success of this show was due to the varied performances which satisfied the interests of all. Over $600.00 was made, $75.00 of which was donated to the 1968 Wallaceburg Flood Fund. Congratulations on your success!

THE NEGRO PROBLEM IN THE USA

At one time the white people in the United States were able to put aside the negro problem as if it did not exist. They can do this no longer. The negro through legislature has received his demands for equality with the white man. But he still has several barriers to overcome before he will be accepted on an equal basis. The main problem facing the negro, one that he has faced since his freedom from slavery, is social inequality. Another problem is his lack of inequality. Perhaps a more immediate problem facing us today, and one that threatens to wipe out what gains he has made, is the method in which the negro is trying to gain social equality and an identity.

The one problem that southern aristocrats feared most when they released the slave population was the loss of different social levels between the white and negro. The negro has gained equality under the law but he still has not received social equality with the white man. He lives in slum dwellings and works at leftover jobs that white men would not do. He is not accepted on an equal basis with the white man in his social life. Inter-marriage is considered taboo between the two races. This problem of social inequality leads us to his next problem — his lost identity.

The negro is ashamed of his colour and of his ancestors. He is seeking a new identity as he tries to imitate the white man. The negro can now go to special beauty parlors for men or women, to have his curly hair straightened by special techniques. It then can be shaped into any one of a number of hair styles popular among the white men and women. Instead of being proud of his colour and of his ancestry he denies them and tries to be a white person. This is his mistake, for the white people will someday accept the negro on an equal basis as a different race but never on an equal basis because he claims to act and live like a white man. These two problems of lack of identity and social inequality lead us to his next problem — his method of revolt.

At first his way of revolt was quiet and non-violent. Men like Martin Luther King led quiet, peaceful, protest marches. Because these protest marches did not solve the negro's problem fast enough he turned to violence and riots. The best example of this is the Detroit riots last summer and the Harlem riots a few years ago. The peaceful organizations led by men such as Doctor King have turned into organizations such as the Black Power which advocates violence as a means to its end. These have only caused to inflame the white people and to make them think twice about freedoms that they have already given the negro. Many white people who said that the negro should have equality now look upon him with distrust because of these riots.

These are only a few problems that have arisen because of the negro in the United States. And although there are many more I think the people in the United States can start to look for a peaceful co-existence among themselves only after the problems of social inequality among the races, an identity for the negro and the negro's method of revolt have been solved.

Jack Kinsley

A youthful lad is walking.
He walks as a man would walk,
Head high, shoulders straight
But he is only a young boy,
He misses the dirty puddles,
Because his new clothes are clean,
Up the road he sees
Another young boy walking,
But he is lame and walks broken,
His clumsy crutches don't miss the puddles
And his clothes are old and ragged.
As the lame boy raises his lowered head
To see the youthful lad,
He falls over a small stone.
The hard road scrapes his face
Now he is not only lame
But he has fallen in front of a high, youthful lad;
The clean boy does not look,
Because the lame are not in his class.
The clean boy does not care,
Because his friends of his class would not care.
The clean boy walks past
And never again shall the lame boy
Be clean, youthful or wanted.

THE TRUTH ABOUT POEMS

Poems are the down-fall of a student.
The uprise of a failure.
The mark of an ignorant pupil,
And usually of no value to anyone.

WHAT IS LOVE?

Is it a toy you can play with?
or is it a game you play?
Is it a pencil, or could it even be a piece of paper?
Can it be a bomb, or maybe a building that can be knocked down.

No, it isn't a toy or a game,
Although people treat it as such.
It isn't even a pencil for you can't write with it,
But it can be written about.
It surely can't be a piece of paper,
For true love can't be torn apart,
No, it isn't a bomb for a bomb explodes.
But love can cause destruction if it is misused.
No, it isn't even a building that can be knocked down under pressure, because love is so great you can't even compare it to the biggest building ever made.

Love, as they say, is the greatest thing
the world has ever know.
It was in the beginning.
It is now.
It shall go on until eternity.

AGELESS LONER

Once a boy, always a boy,
 But never a man.
 Twice he was whipped, thrice put down,
 But never praised.
 Did a good deed many a time
 Nobody noticed.
 Tried to help,
 But always shuddered and heard them say,
 "You're not a man yet."
 He walked down the street—a one-way street.
 Looked for security, but none could find.
 Slowly and carefully they tore him apart.
 Till nothing was left but his YOUTHFUL heart.

GOSSIP

Pick, pick, pick, pick
 Many jaws are working
 Pick, pick, pick, pick
 The victim's good as dead.
 Eyes, ears, mouth, nose,
 Feet, legs, arms, clothes.
 Chew, chew, chew, chew.
 They're working on the head.
 Crunch, crunch, crunch, crunch.
 The body's going to pieces
 With every dig of claw from paw
 Of cats that kill the meeces.
 Shake, shake, shake, shake.
 They're batting around the ball
 To learn of all the life within
 To chew up at next night's howl.
 Dig, dig, dig, dig.
 The corpse is going in the ground
 But fleas will spread like vermin dead
 An epidemic faun a dread
 For the flea might land upon their head
 And the cats will scratch and spread that flea
 Like gloomy Fog on a white capped sea.

GENUS HALIAEETUS AND THE DOVE OR
 THE BIRD OF PREY

Genus has long been fattening the dove awaiting the time for consumption. First, little crumbs and then coming in greater and greater sums until the dove's constitution and state of well-being depended almost entirely on Genus. Although Genus was already overweight and had gained many enemies because of his size and great strength he was jealous of the dove. For the dove was obtaining something that had much eluded Genus. This was popularity and respectability. Genus was fast losing face and the dove fast gaining. The dove was characteristically modest and peace loving while Genus, although possessing some good qualities, managed to hide these by being loud and boisterous and often irritating his neighbours.

So, having these faults, and one much worse, greed, Genus had decided that it was time to move on to bigger and better things: That his affairs abroad were all going askew just increased his determination to be successful over the dove.

As I watched I noticed that the dove's end of existence was coming closer and closer. I remembered when the dove was truly strong and free. But she allowed herself to become domesticated and was beginning to enjoy the easy life. The dove was warned by her friends, relatives, and her immediate family. Temporarily she rallied but it was too much work. Besides she had a trusting nature.

Now Genus Haliaeetus of the family of Leucocephalus was slowly roasting the dove. Genus had a smile on his face because he remembered the dove comes from the pigeon family. But the dove was also smiling for she had realized the truth — the eagle is a close relative to the vulture.

The dove with new found boldness plus strength of old said the words that I had longed to hear, "Eagle, you know what you can do with that scroll", or to paraphrase the great Latin Americans, "Yankes, go home!"

Chere Brenda:

Je suis arrivée en Angleterre vendredi. J'ai volé en avion à travers l'Atlantique.

L'aéroport à Montréal était très occupé parce que Noël vient. Il y a eu beaucoup de gens.

Samedi, je suis allée voir les bâtiments de Parlement. Ils sont très intéressants. Les bâtiments sont grands et beaux. Puis j'ai visité le Palais de Buckingham où la Reine Elisabeth demeure.

Dimanche, je suis allée à l'église à Manchester. C'est une petite et belle église. Puis j'ai fait une promenade à la forêt, derrière l'église. Il a fait froid et il a neigé mais il a été très tranquille.

Le lendemain, j'ai marché le long de la rue Carnaby et ai regardé les vêtements dans une petite boutique, j'ai acheté des disques de mes chanteurs favoris.

Tout le monde a parlé en anglais et je ne les a pas compris. Hier soir, j'ai marché à travers le Pont de Londres et à travers le fleuve Thames qui est un grand fleuve.

Aujourd'hui je t'écris cette lettre. Ce soir à six heures, mon avion quitte Londres pour Toronto. Mon voyage était merveilleux.

Ta bonne amie,

THE BEACH

All I saw was white, fringed with a tint of black. On its broad expanse I learned to love the sea, the elements. Birds hovered and jiggled and cursed at my beach, but I did not care. The beach protected me, made me feel I ruled its sand. The beach dipped and dived as far as I could see in both directions. Foliage covered the innermost warposts of the beach, their sentinel stood for the beach's freedom. Up front, the azure tinged water brought the dreary beach warmth and a beauty beyond description. It held all viewers in suspense, guiding their every sinew to the open mirage.

Even with all the false pretense the beach acted upon, the beach was still very lonely. This particular day was very rainy; a mood of sadness mixed with a touch of lost love was present. The beach let me think, it led me into a world of thought, took away all my suspicions and hid all touches of antagonism. The pale, soft brown beach brought me into a state of tears. Some of the beach was pock-marked with the big sad drops of rain, but its face turned hard and barren, as if repelled by the sadness from above. Now the water rushed in little rivulets, as if escaping some unknown fear.

In the deep dark horizon I saw a wistful vision, as if memory had replaced matter. The sky grew darker, for nightfall was near. A summer breeze sifted lazily as a kite in the open air. First I could feel its presence, then farther out white-caps appeared. Trees groaned with reluctance, leaves fell, the wind became stronger. Fury erupted all around, waves heaved their weight forward in never-ending sequence of piggy-back. The serene beach lost its vigour and retreated in mirth. The waves were surging, resurging, surging, till a rhythm of astute frenzy was produced. I got to my feet, looked about and wept. My whole life I had been rejected, now even my intimate friend had rejected me. The sand covered my foot-prints, my memory gone, for the beach ignored me. The sky cleared, the birds returned. The beach resumed its old habits, life again began. A song filled the air for the beach again foresaw a new human relationship. Far down the beach, a boy came, a very lonely boy.

Within the realm of infinite things
Time rules, dusk to dawn.
Through the realm of human minds
Time quickly passes on.

MY MASTER

It holds a death-lock on my wrist
I am constantly staring at its blank
But meaningful face. A white or black disk
Which even glares in the dark.

It is always in motion, never leaving its circular track
But always advancing. I must obey its signals
They are everywhere. Eat, sleep, day, night
What is right? My thoughts or my device

Always guarding me, don't be late
You have a date. My little disk,
It is time, it knows all
And all it does is tick, tick, tick.

THE NIGHT

Suddenly it was raining. The foggy, star-filled sky made the narrow winding road seem untrustworthy as the gripping tires skidded over it. But would this make any difference? He thought for a moment. Many times he travelled along this uncertain road. This time would not be any different. Or would it?

He had left her house in a hurry and was greatly confused now. The thought of what she had said to him and how hurt he was to hear the painful words she had said so politely. But why? Was it his fault? They had always gotten along very well together. He was good to her and she was good to him. For a reason unknown to him, she had ended all they had hoped for that night.

He was in a hurry now. The trees passed by more quickly. He was going faster and faster though he didn't know where. Their conversation kept pounding in his head. He could never forget her last good-bye, knowing that it was the last. Then the car swerved. The gripping tires could not be steady on the ice-like road. One head light was dim; the other had gone out. Faintly he viewed a cluster of trees ahead around the sharp bend in the road. The tires screamed. There was the pound of broken glass and of crushing steel as he swerved and hit the trees.

He was not unconscious, although faintly breathing. The shattering glass had pierced his face. He felt the pain. But this was not as painful as when she had said good-bye. He was alone now, but the memory of her was strong in his mind. He would not forget her and he died with her name on his lips that night.

NATURAL DEATH

Locked in splendour, our goal is achieved.

Clinging to the wheel, it comes to full circle-
The circumference has been dented, but
It rolls on, one turn being lost forever.

With dead eyes, life is viewed
From an Absolute form, obsolete to our limited minds.
In the expanse of Infinite time it was barely a moment,
But to death it was an instant of many years.

Life is a process of dying,
Birth being linked to death by life.
Death is feared; although,
It is the most sublime adventure of life.

In silky surroundings nothing remains,
All that is left is in the memories of others.

"The work is done", another revolution completed.

Locked in splendour, life's goal is achieved.

THE STUDENT

Confused, unaware, and alone,
Searching for Truth.
Criticized for self-expression, still
It is demanded, to advance.

Restraining false contempt for authority,
Depressed in Ignorance.
Possessing desire to escape,
Reality is his control.

Alan Mathany 12A

ONE

In a busy world as ours,
Time has no rest.
Imagine a Utopia
With peace, understanding and freedom;
No war, no unrest, or racial discrimination
With countries in one "Council of Nations"
To be governed as fit lands with socialism,
And speak one tongue with many.
The earth on its axis, a mature developed planet
Ready to better its trade with other galaxies
And to explore the unknown.
Equality in every form; apartheid not understood.
The skies with blue and warming rays,
Though in the heights skiers praise
A paradise; no apathy.
Palms and fruit grow abundantly
No varmints to hinder such splendour
Water in rippling fresh harmony
Birds and creatures free in safety
In sanctuary no poacher dare inhabit.
For scholars,
Extreme stress in morning but the rest
In sports and social satire
Olympic trials in every state
Participation beyond copious
Competition with many and obscure
Free religion, worship of One
Penury uncommon, no diseases
Death by sleep
The world uniform.

Sue Mitciffe

And shall I turn from this my life and flee?
And drift within my dreams without aim?
O time, oh, what have you to do with me?

The singing moments pass, and they are free
That do imprison me, with age and name,
And shall I turn from this my life and flee?

O drifting, sifting seconds, could I see
But for a second without fear or shame!
O time what have you to do with me?

And I who cry against that which must be
Who fear the changing years—I am the same;
And shall I turn from this my life and flee?

The haze of days floats by me. Silently
They came, And they are going—as they came
O, time what have you to do with me?

I fear to cast myself into the sea
Of time; I am a flame, a tiny flame
And shall I turn from this my life and flee?
O time what have you to do with me?

WHAT I FOUND AT BREAKFAST-

As I crunched my way through a bowl of "Wheaties", I spied a tiny black speck whirling around the circumference of my bowl on a tidal wave of milk. It was the torso of a bedraggled ant who had evidently thought he had at last found that one perfect wave. As I gazed with disgust, the "speck" was washed upon a titanic piece of "Wheaties". By then my disgust had changed to curiosity, and I looked more closely. Remorsefully, I perceived that the little fellow had at last come to grips with fate.

As he lay there so gallantly, as waves of milk lapped silently over his body, which was now an imbroglgio of limbs, I noticed that he was missing a leg. No doubt he had lost it fighting valiantly to shield his homeland from the internecine forces of the enemy. I also beheld that his minute tentacles were worn down, his eyes dilated and his forehead wrinkled. Yes, my friends, the poor beast had worked far into the night for days on end, meditating, striving to better the world for the good of all. Truly then this noble ant believed it the duty of every ant to endeavour to better the world for the next generation: nobles and peasants, browns, reds, and blacks alike, so that one day the supreme goal of eternal bliss and brotherhood could be reached.

His stomach was pinched; yet he clenched in his mandibles a piece of "Wheatie" which he was carrying back to his comrades while he was starving-how unselfish.

Why then had he deserved such an unkind fate—cast away, dead, unrecognized and unpraised on this desert isle? Had he known where he was ultimately going? Had he felt he had succeeded? Had he felt his stay in this world had been worthwhile—to work dexterously, dauntlessly with the harmony of life, to smell a rose at dusk, to sip dew at dawn, to bask in the noonday sun, to rest beneath the shade of a sprawling tree? Had he ever queried his purpose why, where, or what he was in the vast expanse of the cosmos, in time? How could this creature wait so silently from the dawn of the intangible fourth dimension for destiny to allot him his turn, a mere flicker, in all of time and then die to be eternally non-existent, unheeded and unseen! Surely, this is not the fate of so noble a mind!

I think I would have died thinking of the abstruse of this being had I not been shocked back into reality when another of these mites swam the milky mere and began to hover solemnly over his fallen comrade. He seemed to mutter, "O, that a man might know the end of this day's business ere it come! But it sufficeth that the day will end, and then the end is known. Come, ho! Away!"

THE NIGHT

Slowly the daylight is fading,
The end of the day draws near;
There's a stillness in the depth of the forest,
Which lurks in the shadow of fear.

The night calls out; mournful haunting;
The echoes resound in the glen;
They recede, now sound again; very softly,
Then the stillness forebodes once again.

The shadow of night reaches out,
Enveloping all in its way;
Then the faint rays of dawn stab the darkness,
The curtain of night fades away.
